NEW YORK, May 2 - Fifty-four delegates to the republican national convention and as delegates to the democratic national convention will be selected in primaries and state conventions to be held this week. In addition Indiana, which sends thirty delegates to each national convention will hold a preferential presidential primary, preparatory to the republican and democratic state conventions. May 12 and May 13 respectively, at which the delegates are elected. Utah republicans hold a state convention at Price tomorrow at which eight delegates are chosen, four district delegates and four at large. Senator Hiram Johnson of California, Governor Frank O. Low-den of Illinois and Major General Leonard Wood each have conducted a campaign in the state although it is nossible that an uninstructed deleis possible that an uninstructed delegation may be chosen.

Sixteen delegates to each national convention will be elected at the presidential preference primary in Maryland tomorrow, Senator Johnson and General Wood are the prin-son and General Wood are the principal republican presidential contestants, electors also having the opportunity to vote for uninstructed delegates. The names of no candidates for the democratic presidential nomination appears on the ballot.

Kentucky elects 26 delegates to the democratic national convention at a state convention in Louisville on Tuesday. The principal contest will be between delegates wishing to go to the national convention uninstructed and those pleiged to Governor James M. Cox of Ohlo.

California holds a state-wide primary Tuesday to choose 26 delegates each to the republican democratic and prohibition national conventions.
